ABSTRACT

According to history, Greek was very advance in all the aspects of civilization. Then they were the icon of all kinds of cultural activities for the whole people of the world. As a result, in the field of literature, the feature of their civilization was a potential influence. Many poets, especially in English literature were inspired from them, but John Keats was the most important name among the poets. His literary achievements were a tremendous notable side of English poetry. It was the query of the critics of all time that under what kind of influence Keats was so successful dealing with Greek customs in his literature. Along with this, his technique of writing in this discussable point should be mentioned briefly. So the essence and main subject of this thesis was depended upon the experiment on the "Hellenism" or Greekness of Keats in his literary works.
